

Training “Working with historical memory in non-formal citizenship education” in the frames of long-term project

“History and Memory Culture as Topics for Youth Work”

The coordinating organization:

<https://www.austausch.org/en/>

With the support of the Erasmus+ Programme of the European Union

The aim of the training is to raise awareness of educators and youth workers of dealing with issues on history and memory (with focus on changes in Europe in 1980th-1990th) through offering them new perspectives on such work, experience and debriefing non-formal educational methods and working together on visions of such work in frames of international youth exchanges.

The objectives of the training are to promote opportunities for the participants:

- to raise awareness of their own attitudes towards history and memory (with focus on changes in Europe in 1980th-1990th), the connected practices connected and impact these issues have on them and their work;
- to get an opportunity to reflect their work with youth and get feedback on their approaches from different perspectives;
- to learn (to experience and understand the specifics) non-formal educational methods, that can be used in work with issues of history and memory;
- to understand new perspectives and aspects of non-formal citizenship education, programme design and international youth exchanges as well as try to reflect own practice and work together through them;
- to get to know different narratives and interpretation of changes in Europe in 1980th-1990th, it's complicity and implications and discuss what can be focus of international youth projects on this topic;
- to reflect how addressing to issues of memory and history (and specifically connected with the changes in Europe in 1980th-1990th) can deal with needs of young people and developing their competences to live in today's divers society.

The following topics will be in focus of the training:

- What is Memory, History, Remembrance (Commemoration practices)? What are the meaning(s) of dealing with them? What for and how can we work with them in non-formal citizenship education?
- What needs of young people can be addressed through working with history and memory? Memory and Identity. Memory work or duty of memory?
- What does it mean to work with history and memory in the International context: new opportunities and risks, new focuses, questions and approaches.
- Narratives of 1980th-1990th Changes in the participants' countries.
- Non-formal citizenship education as a space for participation for everybody. Diversity conscious approach.
- Design of a programme of international youth exchange. Learning aims – content – methods. Working with group dynamic.
- Experiencing and reflection on methods of working with history and memory issues. Discussing on pedagogical levels of their objectives, opportunities, limits, risks, possibilities for adaptation, requirements to moderation and possible place in programmes.

These topics will be the base for design of the training programme. Due to complex interconnections some overlapping between them different aspect of the topics can be addressed in different parts of the training as well as some sessions/methods can deal with more than one topic.

Following the principles of orientation for group dynamic and learning process the trainers reserve the right to correct the programme (schedule, proportions of time for different topics, offers of new issues etc.) on different stages of preparation and implementation of the training programme.

The approach and methodology

Working with the named topics will be organized through interactive methods of non-formal education. Most of them can be adapted for international youth exchanges and other activities with young people. Active participation of everybody in all phases – “play” (doing “exercises”) and debriefing as participants as well as meta- (pedagogical) reflection – is necessary contribution into learning results of the group, other participants and oneself.

The training approach promotes interaction and reflection. The participant are invited to take part in discussions, simulation games, visits, opinion sharing and other interactive methods. Working individually, in different small groups and in plenary (all together) will be alternated.

Since non-formal citizenship education is focused more on dealing with values/attitudes, social practices and relevant skills, it is important that trainers/educators also examine and become more aware concerning they own ones. Due to that, the training topics will be exploring not only on pedagogical and/or social, but also on personal level. It's important if the participants are ready to reflect their experience (with memory/history and with youth work), think critically about their own attitudes and approached and share their thoughts and feelings with the group.
