Background of the training

In times of military aggression, climate crisis, right-wing politics on the rise and ongoing global injustices, peace education is needed more than ever. But what does it really mean to include justice aspects in training, seminars and educational projects? How can we include the values of SCI, such as social justice, climate justice and global justice into our work as trainers?

This sounds like it might be very complex, right? Well, you're not wrong, but learning about it and about integrating it in your work is a first step to positively contribute towards a more just environment.

If you want to learn more about working with a critical mindset, non-formal education tools, and trying out different facilitation methods and concepts, FLOW is the place for you.

WHAT is FLOW?

FLOW stands for Facilitating, Learning, Organising and Welcoming. It's a training of trainers for learning about facilitation in a non-formal education setting, and gaining insights into sustainable and inclusive project design and coordination. You can read more about previous editions of this training here.

Training content

FLOW will be focused on gaining knowledge and practical skills in facilitation.

We'll start with an introduction into facilitation, going into topics like ways of learning, moderation and leading a group, followed by a more detailed approach on the role of a trainer/facilitator. The main topics we'd like to focus on will be practical tips, interaction and working with a group, critical perspectives in facilitation (especially looking at anti-discrimination, sustainability and power dynamics), frame of the projects, education methods and last but not least, the outcome and application of projects.

The structure that we'd like to follow will give you an insight into what it can mean to be a facilitator, tools and activities, learning methods and a space to try it out!

If you want to get a better idea about what these topics contain, you can find a few key points in the following.

Content overview

- ☐ How to be an inclusive facilitator and how to educate yourself
- ☐ Types of learning and education
- ☐ Ethical reflection on power positions of a facilitator
- ☐ Many methods you can just use for your work after
- ☐ Peace education and Global Learning as a career
- ☐ Radical self-care and resilience as a trainer
- ☐ Facilitating in times of collapse

- ☐ The importance of care work in educational projects
- ☐ Open Space
- ☐ ...and much more!

We expect all participants to come up with a (small) educational project they would like to conduct later in 2026. The trainers will support them in this process during the training and also afterwards, if requested.

We set this training up to be interactive, fun and with a diverse range of methods, with movement and interactivity. During this project, we want to create an atmosphere of peace, empathy, belonging and safety within our group.

Who's involved?

This edition of FLOW is organised by 3 of SCI's non-formal educators, together with SCI-IS and SCI Austria.

The facilitators:

Tamia Alcázar (she/her) is a facilitator based in Vienna/Austria. She's worked on Global Justice topics with methods of non-formal education since 2018 - also coordinating volunteer activities. Her main focus nowadays lies on decolonisation and anti-racism, emphasising intersectionality. After participating in a seminar she continued working with SCI as a trainer on topics like White Saviorism and decolonial cities. She also facilitates workshops on social competence, emotions and strengthening community within classrooms.

Sima* Jakob (they/them) is a trainer, facilitator and activist based in Leipzig, Germany. Their main topics are climate justice, anti-discrimination and gender as well as project management and group structures. Sima* works as a trainer for SCI and other NGOs since 2014 and has co-founded the educational collective "Bildung für utopischen Wandel". They facilitated the previous editions of FLOW and several other train the trainer courses.

Thomas Schallhart (he/they) is a trainer and political educator based in Berlin, Germany. His main focuses are queer rights, climate justice, global justice and antimilitarism. They have co-founded the collectives Critical Queer Solidarity and Bildung für utopischen Wandel. Thomas has been a trainer with SCI since 2012 and has co-written several toolkits on non-formal education, anti-discrimination, global education and climate education and is an active member of the No More War working group of SCI.

Sustainable food: The food we provide will be vegan. This is not just a practical decision, but also an ideological one. SCI believes in the values of sustainability and climate justice – and if we want to contribute to a more peaceful planet, we need to give up on industrialised animal agriculture and its destructive effects on our planet. After being accepted to the training, you can tell us if you have any diets, allergies or intolerances that we should be aware of.
