The environmental consequences of occupation and war

On 5 November 2026, the Erasmus+ project ReAct Now will bring together Palestinian organisations, European policymakers and human rights advocates for a press conference examining these consequences and their connection to the climate crisis.
The event will highlight how environmental destruction adds to existing inequalities and creates further obstacles to recovery, environmental justice and the Palestinian people's right to self-determination.

The voices we need to hear

- Nidaa Nassar, activist and director of Baladna will speak alongside:

Cecilia Strada and Annalisa Corrado, Members of the European Parliament, and Luisa Morgantini, former Vice-President of the European Parliament and long-standing Palestinian rights activist.
The discussion will be moderated by Vanessa Pallucchi, Vice President of Legambiente.

🌱 What does this have to do with climate justice?

In fact, a lot.

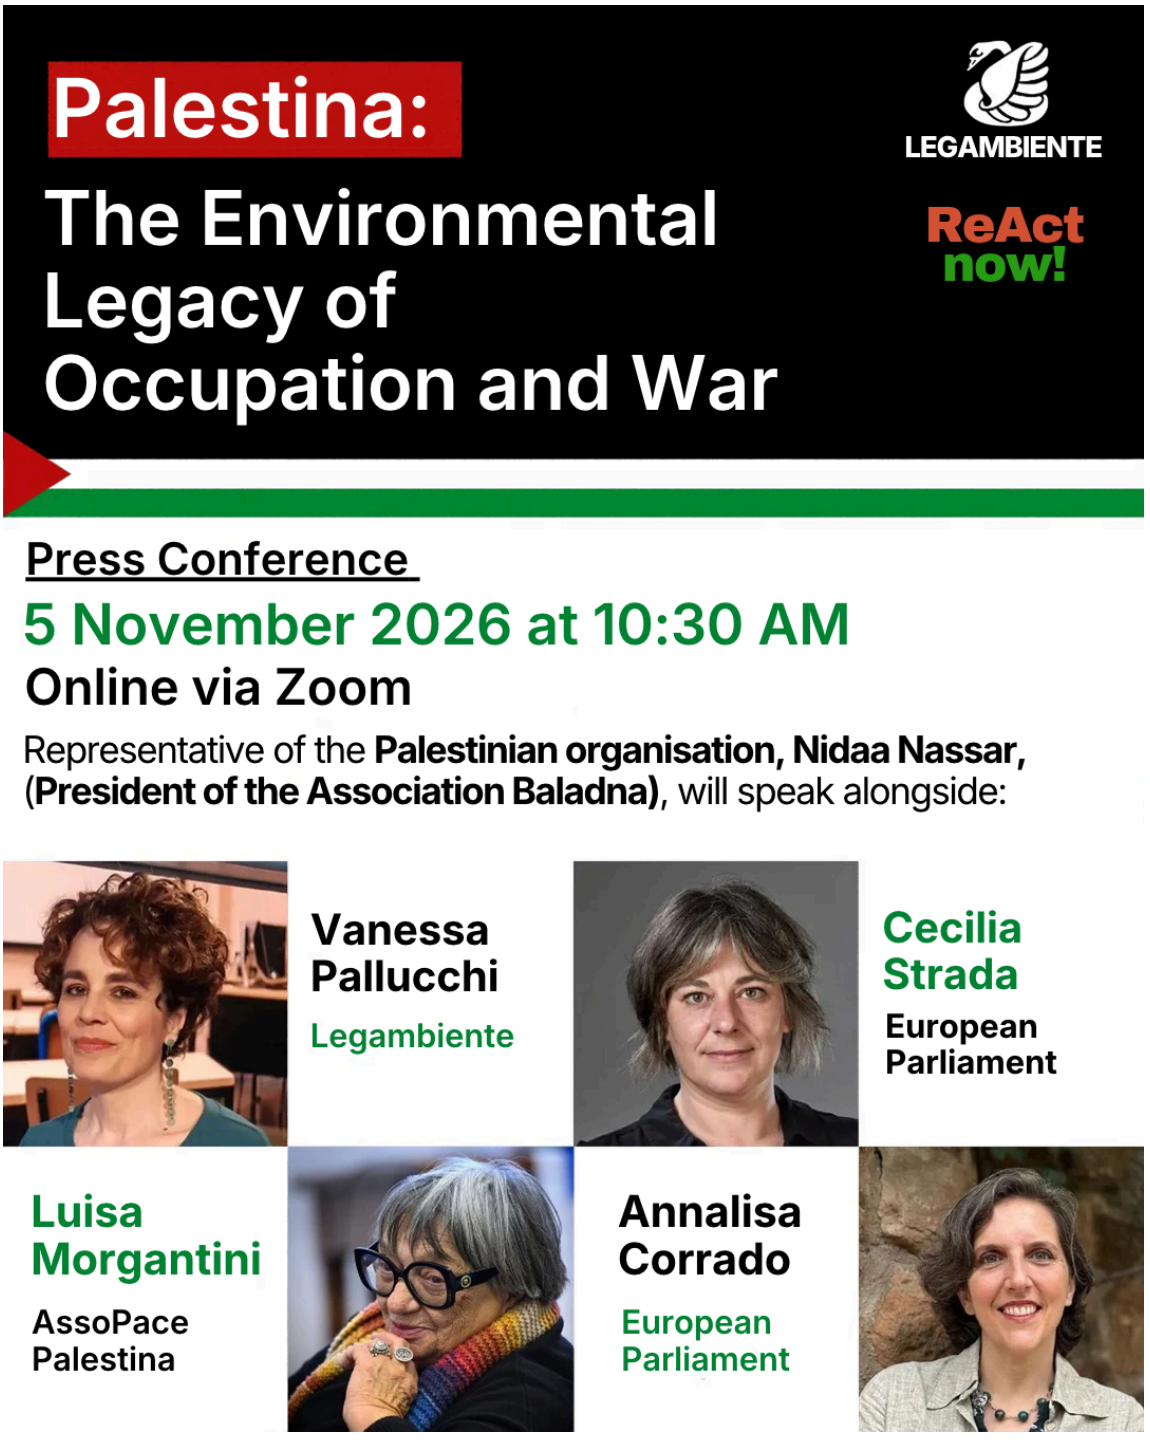

Access to land, water and natural resources is not only an environmental question. It is also about health, livelihoods, fundamental rights and the ability of communities to shape their own future.

This connection has been at the heart of ReAct Now, a project bringing together young activists and organisations from six countries across Europe and the MENA region.

Through training, local actions and international exchanges, participants have explored how climate justice and human rights intersect, and how young people can turn knowledge into collective action.

The press conference brings these questions into focus through the experiences of Palestinian organisations working within the project.

Why share this invitation?

Because the environmental consequences of occupation and genocide concern more than one territory. They raise questions about human rights, international responsibility and what environmental justice means in practice.

And because the people experiencing these realities must be part of the discussions about their future.

Join us online on 5 November, and help this conversation reach further.

Know someone working on climate justice, peace, human rights or international solidarity? Forward them this invitation.
